Tucked into the western head of East Sound, Judd Cove Preserve protects important tidelands, marine shoreline, and shady conifer forest. The site is also the location of a partially restored 1880's lime kiln and quarry which help tell the story of the lime industry on Orcas Island. There is parking for 8 vehicles, a 0.5 mile forest loop trail, and access to a sheltered cobble beach at the Preserve's eastern end. Visitors are asked to leave marine life and drift logs undisturbed, and not to trespass on adjoining private land and beach.

A critical portion of the preserve was acquired and restored thanks to the Trust for Public Land, Washington State Recreation and Conservation Board, and Washington State Department of Natural Resources.
